

It's Time To Finish That Classic Car Restoration. Here' Why

Monday, September 26, 2016 3:45 PM

Do you love the sound of an engine purring? Does your heart skip a beat when you see a classic car drive past you? Are you a frequenter of car shows? If you answered yes to these than you may also have an antique or collector car of your own. Perhaps that car has been sitting in your garage for years, waiting for some attention. You'll get to it someday, you say to yourself, but when?

Did you know the average full restoration takes an experienced mechanic more than 700 hours to complete? That's a lot of work. If you don't have this sort time on your hands it may be a good idea to call in the pros for some help. Here are four excellent reasons to consider having your vehicle professionally restored.

The longer the project sits the more work it will take.

If your dream car has been sitting for years it is only going to develop more problems. Rust could take over valuable parts, the engine may become seized, interior pieces will rot and numerous other problems will take hold. Don't let this happen to your baby on wheels, inquire with a classic car specialist about getting your vehicle's needs taken care of.

The market value of collector cars is growing

Classic cars and muscle cars have been rising in prices to astronomical figures. So perhaps that Mustang, Corvette, Tri-5 Chevy or other car sitting under a tarp isn't your favorite car, it's certainly somebody's. By completing a restoration you can get top dollar for your vehicle in a private sale or an auction. Not to mention a classic car is a great retirement or other long-term investment.

The summer car show season is coming up

Don't you want to show off your beauty queen? Well if the motor isn't running the wheels won't be turning and your babe is going to spend another summer indoors. Now is the perfect time to prep your car for a summer full of trophies.

It's a way to preserve history

When a vehicle undergoes a restoration than chances are it will last for a few more generations. This allows kids of today to fall in love with the cars of yesteryear. Car folks can help preserve automotive history.
